

A Reflection on Easter Icons

This fresco of the Anastasis date between 1310-1320 is located in Constantinople within the monastery of the Holy Savior in the Fields. It is a prized work of art among the Orthodox treasures.

You are invited to an evening of reflection on Easter Icons

Church of the Ascension

1476 Sparks Street

Friday, March 15th, 2013: 7pm–9pm

Icons, which have always been central to eastern Christian spiritual practice, have been described as “theology in line and colour.” At the same time, they are intended to be an invitation to prayer. During this Lenten session, we will reflect prayerfully on some well-known icons in order to understand what they are “writing” about the meaning of Easter. Dr. Bruce Ward, from Thorneloe University, will be leading this evening.

All Welcome!
